

Columbia County Port Commissioners plan to turn hundreds of acres of high-value farmland into an industrial biodiesel plant that will pollute the air, pollute the Columbia River, and destroy successful businesses. The land they seek to utilize and take has been farmed for generations. The impacts from this will shut down one of Oregon's last remaining mint farmers, two of Oregon's beloved local blueberry farmers, and one woman-owned grass-fed cattle ranch, among the almost 40 farms affected.

This is a bad idea.
